- ii. Organizer, NIH/NIAID Emory CFAR Annual HIV & Aging Networking Event, Emory CFAR, 2012-present

14. Contributions to Diversity, Equity, and Inclusion:

My commitment to diversity, equity, and inclusion (DEI) is strongly reflected in my research program as well as in my education and professional service. I support DEI in my research program through the experiences I provide for research staff and mentees as well as the research that I conduct. I also support DEI by promoting diversity among my research team, which has included junior faculty members, postdoctoral and clinical fellows, medical students, Ph.D. students, masters students, postgraduate students, and undergraduate students. Out of 54 trainees I have directly supervised to date, 44 (81%) have been female and 11 (20%) have been underrepresented minority (URM) researchers. In addition to other strategies, I have supported this diversity through my involvement with three programs that provide hands-on-research experience for undergraduate students: 1) the Emory Scholarly Inquiry and Research Experience (SIRE) Program; 2) the Research in Sociology at Emory (RISE) program; and 3) the Emory Summer Undergraduate Research Experience (SURE). Three of the five undergraduate students who have worked in my laboratory from 2017- 2021 have been female and three have been URM researchers. For all trainees who work with me, from the junior faculty level to the undergraduate level, an emphasis of the research we do and the education they receive is on differences in the aging experience related to race, ethnicity, gender, socioeconomic status, sexual orientation, and illness, including health conditions that may carry a social stigma (e.g., dementia, chronic mental illness, and HIV). A major focus is on learning ways to address inequities in care and care access as well as other challenges that older adults face, including ageism, stigma, and discrimination. In addition to providing this training for my research team, I also provide it for other learners, including fellows, residents, and medical students, through a core curriculum course I teach each year on cultural competence. My dedication to promoting DEI in my research program and through my teaching is also reflected in my professional service, which includes engaging with two editorial boards (Journal of Aging Studies and Journal of Applied Gerontology) that have adopted clear policies for supporting DEI in publishing as well as participating in other peer review activities (e.g., NIH study sections) that provide clear guidelines for evaluating inclusion by sex/gender, race, and ethnicity in research applications. In addition, all three of my NIH P30 Center leadership positions (i.e., with Emory CFAR, Roybal Center, and ADRC) have promoted DEI by working to attract and recruit URM researchers to our pilot programs and other mentoring activities as well as engaging members of the community from diverse backgrounds (e.g., HIV patients and advocates and dementia caregivers) as partners in our research programs (i.e., through active community advisory boards).

15. Community Outreach:

a. General:

- i. Volunteer Ombudsman, Atlanta Long-Term Care Ombudsman Program, 1996-1998
- ii. Member, Coalition of Advocates for Georgia's Elderly (CO-AGE), 2001-2007

22. Research Focus:

Research interests include social determinants of health and disparities, vulnerable aging populations, social, behavioral, and environmental aspects of chronic disease management, and long-term care. Much of my current work utilizes a multilevel mixed-methods approach. Recent research focuses on end-of-life and palliative care, Aging and HIV/AIDS, and dementia care.
